age attention is given to advertising. It is a time when there is a realization that people are going to buy and when there is a desire to get the benefit of the trade.

Buying may increase at this season, but there is throughout the year a normal demand for goods which the merchant should be as anxious to get as that during the holiday period.

Advertising is the silent salesman that is relied upon to a large degree to attract the holiday trade. It is just as ready, far reaching and efficient in serving the interests of the tradesman and the purchaser during the other months of the year as it during December, and all that is needed to show it is a judicious use of printer's ink.

BRITISH REVIEWS WELCOME THE ANGLO-IRISH TREATY London, Dec. 9 .- (By The A. P.)-

The British weekly reviews are practically unanimous in welcoming the Anglo-Irish treaty. The Nation calls it "the first great repudiation of force since the ward" The Saturday Review considers that neither n on the matter of elucidation of the Sinn Feln nor Ulster emerges from fany concessions to Ulster beyond what the contained in the treaty. A rigid term if the hargain with the Sinn Fein is uncreased to have been that Ulster shall been to the treaty, and that the ministers pledged themselves that neither now to be the fiscal and other powers that the first would not have agreed but the promises they got in this respect. The please of the Sinn Feiners is declared to have been that the only chance to the committee the promises they got in this respect. The promises they got in this respect to the promises they got in this respect to the promises they got in this respect the promises they got in this respect to the committee of the agreement in the light of its effect upon Anglo-American relations. The Spectator, which throughout the deliberations has been opposed to the deliberations. The spectator, which the proposed to the deliberations has to have been that the only chance to get Uster in was to squeeze her in by commonly inducements.

Less attention is being paid to the situation of Uster than previously, in view of the weightler question of the effect of Emmon De Valena's decision the heaven for which they long—an in-
